Understanding Nouns and Pronouns

A pronoun is a word that takes the place of a noun.

Anna ate her tea when she got home.

noun

pronoun

pronoun

There are seven types of pronouns, which are used for different purposes.

Personal Pronouns These represent people, places and things.	Possessive Pronouns These show ownership and replace possessive noun phrases.	Relative Pronouns These link one part of a sentence to another by introducing a relative clause that describes an earlier noun or pronoun.	Reflexive Pronouns These refer back to an earlier noun or pronoun in a sentence, so the performing and receiving of an action apply to the same	Demonstrative Pronouns These function as subjects of objects in a sentence, replacing nouns.	Interrogative Pronouns These are used to ask questions and represent an unknown subject or object.	Indefinite Pronouns These do not refer to any specific person or thing, but take the place of nouns in a sentence.
I, you, he, she, it, we, you, they (subject) me, you, him, her, it, us, you, them (object)	mine, yours, his, hers, its, ours, yours, theirs	who, whom, whose, which, that, what	person or thing. myself, yourself, himself, herself, ourselves, themselves	this, that, these, those	who, whom, what, which, whose	somebody, someone, something, anybody, anyone, anything, nobody, no one, nothing, all, another, both, each, many, most, other, some, few, none, such
She gave him a piano lesson.	The piano is his.	Jack is the person who plays the piano.	She taught herself.	This is my instrument.	Who is playing?	I haven't seen anyone.

